Texas House of Representatives · 2025 session

How did your Texas House member actually vote?

In 2025 the Texas House voted on hundreds of bills. This site takes 67 of those real votes and asks how you would have voted, without telling you first which party took which side.

What Texas looks like now

Education · Per-student school funding

$13,189 per student

47th of 50 states

Business & Labor · Job growth

132,500 jobs added in 2025 — more than any other state

1st of 50 states for jobs added

Families & Children · Children without health insurance

13.6% of children — about 1.1 million

highest in the nation

Housing · How much housing is being built

74,350 new residential permits in 2025 — more than any state

1st of 50 states

Energy & Environment · What households pay for electricity

16.11¢ per kWh — up about 40% since 2020

Taxes & Spending · Property tax burden

1.245% effective rate — a median bill of $4,108

9th highest of 50 states

Every figure carries its source and its caveats on the site.

These numbers are where Texas stands, from the sources named. They are not proof that any one vote, bill or official caused them — rankings move on population growth, local property values, federal rules and the economy as well as state law. What is on the record is the outcome, the vote, and who held office. Draw your own line between them.

How it works

1. Read what a bill does, in plain language.
2. Say whether you would vote for it or against it.
3. At the end, see where you landed and how the legislators actually voted.

What this site does not do

- It asks for no sign-up, no name and no email address.
- It has no ads and costs nothing.
- Your answers stay on your device unless you choose to send them.

October 5
registration has closed

October 19 to 30
early voting

November 3 election day

Dates from the Texas Secretary of State, confirmed September 13, 2026.

rightnleft.com

Free. No sign-up. Also in Spanish.

Who made it. Marco Arras, a Texas resident. I donate to the Democratic Party, and I say so here before anything else. The rule that picks which votes appear is published and runs identically on both parties, the party is hidden until you answer, and the code and all the data are public so you do not have to take my word for any of it.